

“A Bespoke Banner of Oz”, an alternative Australian national flag design (with suggested adaptations of the design to the other major flags and ensigns of the nation)

See this flag waving. See it in all wind conditions. See many more alternative Australian flag designs at australian.flagalternatives.com.

A time may come when a majority of Australians decide that their current national flag is not a good fit for the nation that it represents. As a result they may seek a new flag, preferably one with colours, symbols, and patterns that are inclusive as possible of all Australians. Perhaps that ‘tailor-made’ banner will not only preserve the deep blue field and the white-starred Southern Cross of the current flag, but for visual and symbolic harmony will also include the official hues of some of Australia’s major secondary flags as well, such as the red and gold of the Aboriginal Flag, the ochre of the Flag of the Northern Territory, and the green of the Torres Strait Islander Flag. Perhaps the symbols that it sports will be those that can be embraced by all Aussies with little or no controversy, such as the kangaroo. Perhaps all of its colours and symbols will be arranged in a unique and distinctive pattern such that they will continue to be featured whilst that same pattern also accommodates the various colours, symbols, and patterns of the remaining flags and ensigns of Australia, including its Defence Forces flags, its civil aviation and maritime ensigns, its state and governors’ flags, and its shorter-length UN flag.